
Toontrack is a company which builds instrument software for use by musicians, and they have released a series of eleven extreme blast libraries. These libraries are designed to provide a more extreme sound for metal players who frequent the studio. The Toontrack Library Of The Extreme Blasts Fills contains over one thousand blast beats, fills, drum rolls, and various other kinds of drum sounds. These are all available on the library discs in specific formats so that they are easy to access by the musician. All of these sounds come from the library of the extreme sessions which were performed by Dennis Leeftang at Junkie Studios in Amsterdam, The Netherlands. As a result of this, each sound has its own variation that is more personalized to fit each drummer's style. The sounds on this library are organized according to various musical genres, including thrash metal. Although each genre is separated, there are some sounds that can crossover between them. For example, the thrash metal sounds might include aggressive drums that are played fast and loud, with low-tuned hi-hat patterns that are played very quickly. The extreme thrash metal drums might include sounds with a lot of dynamic range, especially with cymbals playing quickly, and crashes that remain very sharp. This is because this library was created to make extreme drums easier to use by musicians who need all of the versatility of the various sounds they can play. The sounds are all organized into sections, including the sections that are within each genre. The Toontrack Library Of The Extreme Blasts Fills was created by Toontrack Music, which is a company that focuses on creating virtual instrument software for use by musicians. This library was released in October 12, 2013. Each of the eleven discs carries its own set of sounds, and can be played independently of other discs in this collection. All of these sounds are available in the formats of WAVs, SDII files, and REX2 files. Also included with this library is a software program called EZdrummer Lite which contains additional features to work with these types of sounds. EZdrummer Lite is software that was created by Toontrack to work with these sounds. A video was created by Toontrack to promote the library, and it features Jeff Loomis. He is a popular musician who uses Toontrack products. The video focuses on showing the sounds that are available in the library of the extreme sessions, as well as some of those sounds being played out on drums. It is also available as a YouTube Video at <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=878eeb4e9f3267>.
